

The three yetis wandered on through the trees in the sunshine, happy to still be on the forest path after such a tricky day.

They kept walking as the light softened into evening ...

and finally stopped to set up camp for the night.

But despite all their singing the day before, the trio had been completely caught unawares. When they woke up the next morning, they realised that they had bedded down for the night right beside a human camp!

